The same system (or lack of it) is still in effect. We still get complaints about said system.

A contributor to the letters column this week mentioned the keyword to the reform we have proposed: regularity.

The phrases of the official absence rules which concern the the importance of class lectures largest number of students permit irregularity to all extremes. We would benefit. quote: The instructor shall keep a record of absences for each time, and we should learn to acstudent. When, in his opinion, the number of absences for any cept it in college. I think this pracstudent becomes excessive or appears to be unjustified, he shall reach this goal report such student to the dean concerned."

Professors interpret the definitions of "excessive" and "unjustified" from each one's individual viewpoint. So the professor has the uniform system, the student less than the controller beautiful the uniform system; the student has many professors.

The proposal in the letters column sounds ideal, but if put in practice would soon lead to bedlam.

We believe, however, that a uniform system would be fairer for the student in the long rum than the present system.

The Human Comedy

WERY student who stays abreast of the times, who pursues the modern "classies," is now aware that we are in the "Idiot of the liveliest Kernels I've seen in plans were for it to last that long. Era." It's rather odd, on the face of it, that it's just becoming a long time. Last week's front page lowever, it was not long until the has my approval—and I for one train came to a government inknown. This belated disclosure clears up a number of idiotic contemporary inconsistenteies, based on idiotic customs, modes, manners, fashions, systems, and methods. It explains the levity of students, why scholarships aren't awarded to the chess team, and other equally distressing facts.

Enlightening is the announcement to us, indeed! But will this significant fact alter current trends?

Alas, we can't be sure that the responsible people, idiotically speaking, read the "classies."

TimeForMid-Term Checkup

W E think we've found a way to identify 3.0 students before the professor totals his grades at the end of the semester. The formula is simply that the student's suntan shade equals his average letter grade.

The A student has a very slight tan, acquired by a daily walk from his residence to the library.

According to our seale, the B student is a bit darker because he goes swimming twice a month.

From the B shade to deeper ones, the student falls in the just average or below category. The painful hours spent in getting the parboiled look has been successful, but has also struck his mane from the honor roll.

Since this is only midsemester, however, the sun-retarded students might still have time to make a 3.0. But at the cost of that "leisure look."

By Tom Diskln

The 1951 football schedule for the Kentucky Cats, which was released in last Sunday's newspapers, came as quite a surprise to many. The consensus of opinion around the eampus seemed to this reporter one of satisfaction about the '51 card. In fact, most students seemed very well pleased that Kentucky has what can be truthfully be ealled a "tough"

Last spring, when the opponents for UK's footballers for the coming grid season was announced, there was some criticism among the students about having so many "breathers". The general feeling expressed was along these lines: "Why not play a good, tough team? I'd much rather see Kentucky lose by a close score to an outfit such as SMU than have them murder The Citadel". And, of course, this is a good point.

It is very unfortunate that some major bowl committees notice a college grid team's won and lost record more than the caliber of the opposition. A school might play several toughies and finish with say a 7-4 record. Another institution plays two or three rough teams and the rest easy marks. The latter night then end with a 9-2 season record or even 10-1. Who will be selected for a bowl? In most eases, it will be the latter school. However, there seems to be a gradual shift away from this and a more earcful study of a team's opposition. We hope it continues in
